

My basic concern is that the FCC is to regulate the airways for the public good. However, it is now quite obvious that the FCC is now more concerned with lining the pockets of campaign contributors and to hell with the public. Capitulating to the corporate demands for this 'broadcast' flag is the final declaration that the FCC is a corporate whore. Once a whore, always a whore.

Go ahead with your flag, it'll be hacked in a month. Your corporate johns fail to realize that we are customers and not consumers, we are citizens and not criminals, and we want choice and not crap. We are not the FCC and know when we are getting screwed but not kissed. We want to buy quality. ¿If this was not so, then why the hell is StarBucks is still in business?

For once, stand up for the public and not go whoring after the corporate campaign donations. But once a whore, always a whore.
